Health-focused nonprofits receive over $1.1 million in grants from the Pallottine Foundation of Huntington

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. – The Pallottine Foundation of Huntington recently awarded 67 nonprofit organizations in the Tri-State with grants totaling $1,131,078 through its Healthy Communities Initiative. The initiative provides funding up to $50,000 to programs that address health and wellness challenges in the Foundation’s 20-county focus area in West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky.

The Spring 2022 Healthy Communities recipients include food assistance programs, child advocacy centers, mental and behavioral health programs, senior centers, health departments, family resource networks, substance use recovery programs, community centers, and shelters for people experiencing domestic violence or homelessness.

“We are excited to work with these organizations on new health and wellness initiatives in the community,” said Janell Ray, CEO of the Pallottine Foundation of Huntington. “The pandemic forced many nonprofits to focus on providing basic needs with limited staff and resources, so we’re pleased to see our partners once again have the opportunity to initiate new programming that drives positive change.”
